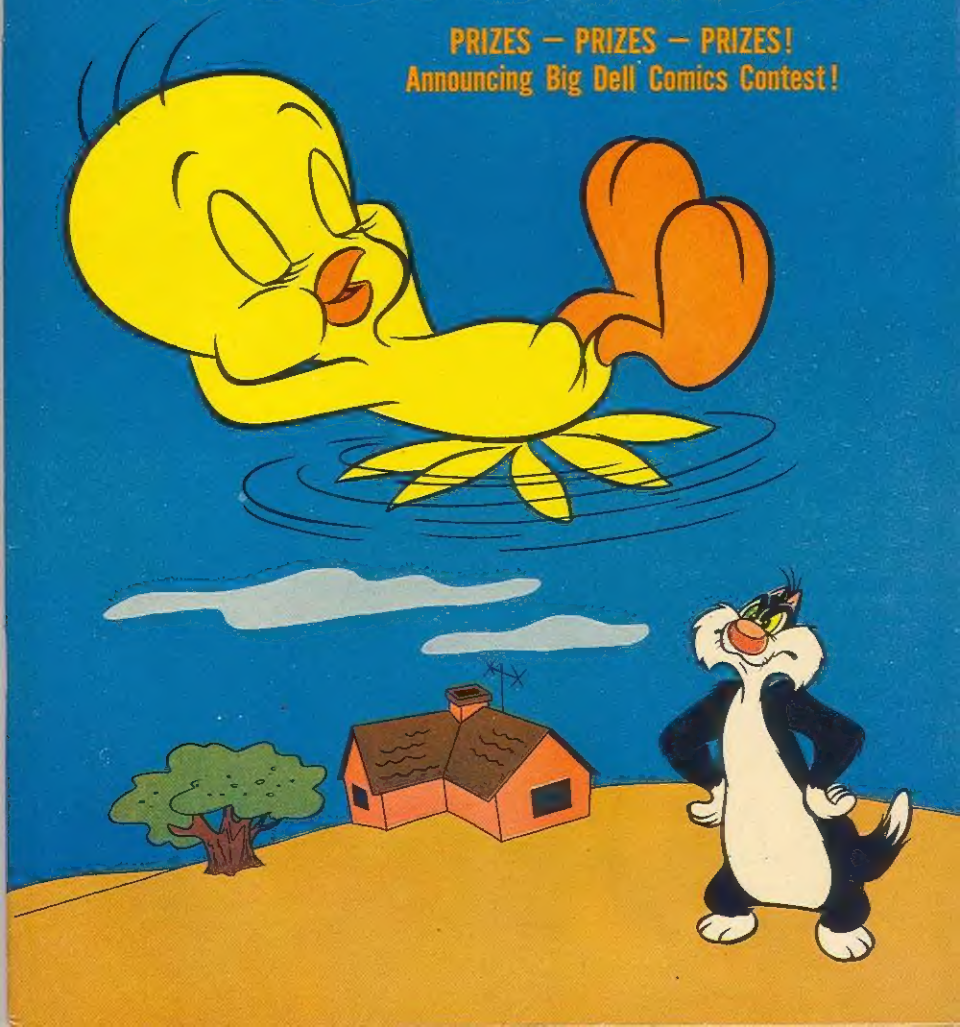
PRIZES — PRIZES — PRIZES!
Announcing Big Dell Comics Contest!



If I were a steamshovel

I'd use both hands to scoop up Kraft Fudgies (both kinds - Chocolate and Vanilla)

You'll dig 'em the most! They're creamy smooth and just busting with energy. In bars of six, or ask Mom to buy the big bag—you get a lot of candy for your money either way!

Kraft makes Fudgies like Kraft makes everything - and that's good!

"Goodness gwacious me," said Elmer Fudd, as he ran between his back porch and the tool shed. "How will I ever get all this painting finished in time?"

"What's your problem, Doc?" asked Bugs, leaning over the fence, watching him.

"Aunt Matilda's coming to visit me," he replied, "and if she sees that I haven't painted the porch yet, there'll be no living with her. You know Aunt Matilda!"

"What you need is some help," offered Bugs, jumping over the fence and grabbing a brush and a bucket. "We'll have it done in the twitch of a whale's whisker."

"Oh, no, you don't, you wascal wabbit," said Elmer. "All you ever do is cause me twouble, and I don't have time for your twicks today."

"Tush!" replied Bugs, as he followed Elmer into the tool shed. "You go into town and get your other chores done, and I'll have your porch painted before you know it."

"I know, I shouldn't twust you," replied Elmer, "but I don't have enough time to argue. And for heaven's sake, don't use that big can of paint in the corner. It belongs to the Highway Department."

"Don't worry about a thing," said Bugs, as he happily started to mix the paints. "I'll have a big surprise for you by the time you get back!"

Alone, Bugs looked around for a pretty shade to paint the porch when his eyes hit on a can of orange.

"Just the thing!" he exclaimed. "I'll make it carrot color . . . the most beautiful color in the world!"

Later that afternoon, when Elmer returned from town, he stopped in his tracks at what confronted him. Brilliant hues of orange were splashed all over his back porch, and Bugs was in the midst of it, splashing some more about! Elmer was so upset, he ran towards the house so fast that he didn't see the paint bucket in time and fell right into it.

"You wascal wabbit!" he screamed. "You've wuined my porch. Get wid of that awful color wight this minute!" And he stormed into the house and slammed the door.

"What a grouch!" mumbled Bugs, setting out for the tool shed as fast as he could run. "Now which can of paint was it that Elmer said not to use?" he wondered, looking over the rows of cans. "Oh, well, it doesn't make any difference, just as long as I get rid of the orange color." He grabbed a big can of white paint and started back at a run.

By the time Elmer had cleaned himself up, Bugs had the whole porch painted white.

"Maybe wabbits can be helpful, after all," admitted Elmer.

That evening, as Bugs was passing Elmer's house, he stopped and blinked his eyes. The whole back porch was lit up, but there wasn't a light on anywhere.

"You despicable cweature!" screamed Elmer as he pounced on Bugs. "You painted my porch with that Highway Department paint that glows in the dark, and every bug in the countryside has come here for the summer!"

"Oh, no!" groaned Bugs.

"Everyone, including a cweature named Bugs," cried Elmer, "and I'm getting wid of that one right now!"

And with that, he lit out after Bugs. Or rather, he lit up after him, for he had fallen in the paint bucket again and was as glowing as the porch as he chased Bugs down the darkened road.
